

LOATH TO DELINEATE THAT WHICH YOU CLAIM TO KNOW.

You shall cling to the idea that there is something that can be explained - verbally of course.

The general idea as far as words go has often been "explained", in the Oriental systems (avoiding "fancy" ideas such as those you mention), in Aldous Huxley's "Perennial Philosophy", in Brunton's "Wisdom of the Ego-self" - & in fact in all books which emphasize the one fact that we arise from (& return to) the one basis of the Universe.

WHAT PREVENTS SUICIDE?

The claims of life, friends etc. "Survive" is our motto while we can. Of course we "value" self, ego. We do not know what happens "after death".

"Awakening" would give you a happier way of regarding this problem.

Friend,

Ad.

P.S.

Scepticism you may say is helpful & unavoidable.

Yes! But how many opportunities are lost that way for fear of a minor disappointment.

And suppose you "scepticize" yourself right out of "awakening" work. I know that is very unfortunate - but I suppose you could go along without an occasional twinge. I wish you could believe a friend & am sorry you can't. Oh well.
